Notes on dealing with Western deception

- Use the Qur'an / Islamic grand narrative of life.
- Adopt a comprehensive holistic multi-disciplinary system approach to study complex composite systems.
- Acquire the interest and ability to analyze the complex systems & to compound the scattered parts to show the whole that contains them¹.
- Be prudent and never underestimate the deceit of others.
- Be skeptical and careful not to fall into the designs of the western elite and their global institutions for global domination.
- Differentiate between the racist ruling elite and the bewildered, deceived & controlled Western masses.
- Differentiate between the crazy elite project for global domination on the one hand, and the useful contributions of Western civilization to human life on the other hand.

Historical evolution of money in human societies

- Commodity barter trading.
- The matter evolved into the use of some durable goods or materials as money to conduct exchanges and measure value.
- It evolved into the use of metals as money.
- The rulers and others imitated and forged it in order to obtain a percentage of the society's production without their contribution or effort in production.
- Gold and silver coins appeared, and their features are: ability to be molded with the required weight, size and shape - ability to preserve for unlimited periods, resistance to acids and alkalis - difficulty of counterfeiting them to distinguish their natural qualities - relative stability of the quantity supplied from them, and the proportion of the increase in the quantity discovered from them with the increase in global production of gold and silver coins.
Commodities and overpopulation - their inherent intrinsic value and relative scarcity.

Gold and silver as money and nothing else

Islam recognized gold and silver as money without any other, and some scholars even went to the fact that God created them to perform the function of money. The Islamic system is characterized by being easy and abstaining, which leads in uncomplicated ways to open the doors of goodness for humanity. The economic system in Islam is summarized as follows:

- An exchange tool:
 - God made people love gold and silver.
 - It is forbidden to hoard gold and silver.
 - It is forbidden to use them as utensils or any use other than money.
 - It is forbidden to adorn yourself with them except for women.
 - The imposition of zakat on the one who saves them.
 - It is forbidden to trade in them, e.g. selling gold for more gold.
 - It is forbidden to cheat in both of them.
- Concerning the transactions:
 - Prohibit usury.
 - Commending spending, i.e. accelerating the circulation of money in society.
 - Urging humans to work.

Western material civilization corruption of the natural monetary system

Western materialist civilization corrupted the natural monetary system as follows:

- Control the sources of precious metals.
- Trading in money.
- Justification and legalization of usury.
- Issuing paper (fiat) money, i.e. making money from nothing and lending it at interest.
- Gradually outlawing dealing with gold and silver, limiting it to paper (fiat) money.
- Establishing financial markets for trading in money and securities.

The European Renaissance has begun with natural monetary system (gold and silver), as in the Mercantile era. Then money traders deviated from this system. The deviation began slow then accelerated to a complete reversal of the global monetary system in the 20th century.

The capitalist elites imposed a very strange monetary system:

- Humans deal with each using a means of exchange (money) issued by financial institutions which is fully controlled by the elite.
- This means of exchange (fiat money) has to be borrowed, that is, people borrow the tool that enables them to deal with each other.
- Everyone pays a portion of their wealth and effort in exchange for the temporal use of this tool.
- All money was borrowed, so that if all loans were paid back or recovered by the elite, money would disappear and people would lose the ability to deal together.
- It is therefore a tool to launch, exchange or restrict the process of producing and exchanging of wealth, goods and services.

The foundations for the corruption of the natural system in the West

European economics was introduced by a group of French Enlightenment philosophers, who applied "Newton's" idea of the mechanical universe on the social process of production and distribution of goods, services and commercial activity. They also developed the following ideas:

- Business activity aims at producing wealth. If left alone without interference from the government, he will increase the wealth of nations.
- The aim of the merchants is to achieve personal benefit, but in seeking and achieving it, everyone benefits.
- Trade increases the productivity of workers, while government intervention spoils the process of increasing wealth and increasing the productivity of workers.
- And they considered that the government should leave individuals alone to work for their personal benefits in what is known as the principle of (let them work).

Economics is defined as the process of analyzing the activity of production and distribution of goods, a process that must be conducted in isolation from any human, dogmatic or moral knowledge, as a completely independent process and activity. The purpose and meaning of human life in economic thought is productive work and the distribution of goods and services. There is really no economy without the principle of separating economic behavior from any other behavior. The western materialistic civilization has taken the following steps to corrupt the natural (Islamic) monetary system:

- Controlling the precious metal.
- Trading in money.
- Justification and institutionalization of usury.
- Issuing paper money, i.e. creating money from nothing.
- Outlawing dealing in gold and silver and limiting dealings to paper money issued centrally.
- Establishment of financial markets for trading in money and securities.

The European Renaissance began with the same principles as the natural monetary system based on gold and silver. The precious metal had a great place in commercial thought (mercantile), where it was considered the mainstay of wealth, and that its accumulation was the most suitable means of preserving wealth at the national level, increasing trade and activating transactions. Then the money changers and currency dealers quickly deviated from this system, using propaganda and semi-scientific means. The deviation started slowly and then accelerated until it ended in a complete revolution of the global monetary system in the twentieth century.

The deviation went through the following stages:

- Imposing control over the entry and exit of the precious metal from and to each country, as trade does not drain the balance of the precious metal and constantly increases it. And manipulating prices so that exports to each country are greater than imports from it. This system was widespread in the nineteenth century, which was the golden era of colonialism and colonial wars, and a precursor to the bloody global wars of the twentieth century. These restrictions made gold lose its freedom of movement between countries as a prerequisite for its success in its natural function as a global currency.
- Trading in money and analyzing usury. The basic condition of natural money is that it cannot be sold, bought, rented or generating additional value by its mere possession as interest under any name. Deviance began in the Renaissance with the increase of deviation of the church. Opinions in favor of usury spread, and its name was changed to "interest" as a neutral name that is not hated. With the increase in wealth, those with surplus gold and silver resorted to depositing their precious metal with the money changers when going to the market or traveling, most of whom were Jews, in return for receipts and fees commensurate with the value of the deposit and the period of storage. With the increase in wealth, the volume of trade and economic activity, such deposits with the money changers increased. The money changers discovered that most of the deposits always remained with them, so they thought of lending them at interest to increase their profits. They printed decorated receipts to be more attractive and to gain the confidence of depositors. Then they waived storage fees in light of the profits of lending those deposits to encourage depositors. With the increase in profits and competition between the money changers, they began to pay interest to depositors so that they themselves benefit from the interest difference between lending and depositing.

- With the increase in this activity, the money changers turned into large banks (Bank of Venice 1157 - Bank of Barcelona 1401 - Bank of Amsterdam 1690...). Bank receipts turned into bearer bonds and were the beginning of the creation of money and quasi-money "that is, bank credit". With the advent of the eighteenth century, usurious transactions became the norm in the western economic system. The system was then supported with manufactured make belief scientific theories and complicated calculations that determine the interest rate were developed. And With the advent of the nineteenth century, using of the method of the carrot and stick, mere talk of usury became a corruption of economic transactions, a historical luxury and the remnant of blind religious fanaticism. Economic thought became based on usury as a solid basis for economic activity.
- When paper money appeared, it represented a real indebtedness, exactly equal to the gold money deposited with the teller. And with the persistence of banks in printing those receipts. Many banks were exposed to the risk of bankruptcy in times of economic crisis due to the waves of running to convert those receipts into gold. Gold reserve was never enough to convert them all. Governments intervened to regulate the process of issuing paper money, determine the percentage of the golden cover. It appointed a private bank (that was theoretically subject to government supervision, which evolved to become the Central Bank) to regulate and supervise other banks. Such supervisor central bank specified the reserve that commercial banks must keep with the central bank as a percentage of the issued loans. As a result of this created money (i.e. quasi-money or bank loans) the general level of prices was increasing. The commercial banks were the only beneficiaries of this process without any risks, with the public bearing the risks of participating in the production process.
- Outlawing dealing with gold.
With the beginning of the nineteenth century, gold began to be withdrawn from economic activity. The bank bonds were first convertible into gold once they were presented to the bank. With the ease of dealing with it and the increased confidence of dealers in this possibility of cashing their bonds, the need to mint gold coins decreased, and the banks were satisfied with keeping gold reserves in the form of bullion whose weight is equal to the value of the reserve. The system of gold coins (Gold Specie Standard) was transformed into the system of gold bullion standard. The percentage of gold reserves to issued paper money continued to drop until it became less than 10% in some cases.

With the outbreak of World War I, people rushed to exchange their paper money for gold, but this was no longer possible because the paper money issued by the banks was many times what they had of gold. Thus, legislations were issued prohibiting the public from acquiring gold (converting their property from it to paper dollars or getting confiscated), suspension of the gold coin system so that paper money had a general power at the national level only, while the use of the gold bullion system was limited to international transactions with severe restrictions on the transfer of gold outside the country. Paper money was then seen as an expression of the national currency, guaranteed by the government.

By 1934, the money of almost all countries became cut from any link to gold except for the United States, which maintained the convertibility of the dollar into gold at 35 dollars an ounce. This necessitated the development of special tables to determine the exchange rates of some currencies, which constantly fluctuated according to the development of economic activity and the quantities of paper money printed, especially during the two world wars, which had a significant inflationary impact.

Human sciences' technology

There are the western "formal Empire" technical army vs. its "informal Empire" technical army:

- The first army produced, satellites, planes, missiles, tanks, computers, mobile phones, surveillance equipment...etc.
- The second army produced schemes for political control and economic drainage, social engineering, social & political fragmentation, cultural distraction, etc.

The intelligent and brightest staff both armies of the western empire. It is safe to assume that what they produced in both fields should be just as sophisticated. As we have often seen, they are very keen not to disclose the secrets of the achievements of the formal empire's army. It is imperative that they guard the achievements of the informal empire's army in the fields of social sciences with even more keenness, because this saves them having to go to war.

Unless our people take extra care, we might fall prey to the designs of the second army.

Are our people in the academia up to the challenge?

In the context of drawing a real national cultural, media, social, economic or political policy aimed at national independent development, we need to develop what may be called "the technology of human sciences".

In the running up to German unification, the famous German banker and economist Alfred Herrhausen was assassinated by a parked-car bomb in 1989 despite strict security protection.

About 15 years ago, nearly a whole team of Turkish engineers working to crack the F16 plane software secret code were dead in a make-believe suicide!

Yes indeed, even bankers and economists and perhaps social scientists, in some cases, are assassinated!

Persistent efforts to establish a global government, constructing the puzzle

- The historical Roman / Jewish origin of the ideas of domination and the dissemination of vice among human beings as given in the Western literature (the cult of the king or the emperor - the Jews as a chosen people - the cooperation of the Romans and the Jews in the taking over of Christianity - Establishment of an institution to define faith and control the believers i.e. the church).
- The evolution of the idea of public control in Western Roman thought. The evolution of the Roman elite and its evolving alignments {the families of the Roman Emperor elites, especially the Gulliv family, which dominated western Europe or allied with the pope after the fall of Eastern Europe and Constantinople, Traders and bankers in Venice as the centre of trade with the Muslim world - the Viking or the Normans elite, who have a pervasive atheist nature, lust for wealth and control who controlled northern Europe - an atheist Jewish elite, as functional groups who adore gold, and are characterized with a kind of rebellion against God and a tendency to abuse and corrupt others. - Individuals who joined service teams who are fully prepared to do anything dishonest for material benefits.

- The development of the modern fiat monetary system (with the gradual withdrawal of gold from circulation) and the realization of what can be achieved by controlling fiat money (controlling sovereigns with sovereign debt - controlling people and societies by issuing money as loans) and establishing banks and central banks as tools to concentrate wealth in the hands of a few and form monopolies.
- Allied European Jewish families control the issuance of fiat money (perhaps as a functional group) and extend their control to America.
- Realizing that for the sustainability of elite control, the public must be deprived of wealth to ensure that they cannot revolt, and plan to weaken the protections of societies, groups, tribes and families and spread vice to ensure stability of this feudal unethical system of control.
- Fighting heavenly religions because they call for one God for all, one divine origin for man, human brotherhood and supreme God ordained morality, while promoting the animal origin of man.
- Gradual realization of the similarity between the evolving fate of monetary/financial capitalism over time through increasing concentration of wealth in the hands of a numerically diminishing minority, and communism in which, power (including disposition of natural resources) is confined to a few members of the Communist Party Central Committee. Ancient philosophers, also thought of some kind of communism of wealth and women, i.e., the domination of wealth and power by the few, while depriving the multitude of it and of the ability to revolt against such slavery (the elite/Jewish origin of communism).
- Such realization possibly resulted in efforts to lay the ideological basis for communist thought, centralized control, and class struggle as an alternative to the humanitarian, social, and tribal fraternity (by Marx and Engels who were adopted and supported by British aristocrats) in accordance with the scientific method.
- Dissemination and promotion of Darwin's theory, which establishes the bases to deny the divine human origin and call for their claimed animal origin, in order to support the idea of racism and the oligarchic rule of the elites. With the dissemination of planned utopian society ideas, ideas of ethnic and eugenic cleansing to improve the human race.
- Recognizing the importance of controlling education, media, culture, rewriting history, elevating material science and presenting elites' ideas in an artificial scientific outfit.
- The development and dissemination of socialist thoughts as a more acceptable form of communism (the Fabian Society in England).
- Dismembering old great empires especially the Ottoman Empire through wars (support for the competitors and insurgencies- practicing the policy of balance of power through supporting the strongest enemies ...) and igniting the fire of the First World War to eliminate the old empires and the fragmentation of their dominion.
- To sustain elite control, all social incubators must be weakened or abolished (propagation of individualism – disintegrating family - spreading class struggle to dismantle societies - fighting religions - destroying morality - spreading sexual freedom - disrupting intergenerational transmission of knowledge through free education - rewrite history ...).
- Advocating women's liberation and feminist movements to remove women from home to be able to indoctrinate younger generations through education, information and cultural institutions, spreading of individualism and sexual freedom to demolish family (promotion of freedom of sex, creating obstacles to marriage and calling for the so-called empowerment of women and children).

- Dissemination of national ideology and encouraging the idea of self-determination even for tiny countries and city states, and supporting the formation of nation-states out of the fragments of empires (an idea analogous to the fragmentation of the family) so that remaking empires again become almost impossible because each nation-state should enjoy international recognition and build an army to protect the interests of its elite and protect the disintegration. And strengthening the ethnic, race, national identity and national history of the new nations to consolidate and strengthen the bases of nation states.
- There was a need for practical experiments to master the art of communist application. That was why, American Jewish bankers financed Russian Jews (then Mao in China) to carry out communist revolutions to implement a pilot application in Russia and China, which they regarded as degenerate species anyway.
- Recognizing the difficulty of imposing a global government on everyone in a short time, and preferring the option of progressive and gradual action using means of encouragement, intimidation and joint action to introduce humanity step by step into global transnational control with the development of innovative means of control and coercion. Some authors call those efforts "Open conspiracy to establish a global government."
- Drawing plans to transform America into a socialist system and integrate it with the Soviet Union through tax-exempt charitable organizations (Carnegie, Rockefeller ...).
- The establishment of the league of nation as a primary institution for the synthesis of new binding system for the emerging nation states and establishing institutions for world governance as a prelude to a global government.
- Rebuilding Nazi Germany and igniting the Second World War to completely eliminate the old imperial and powers aspiring to re-establishing empires, and creating a new type of struggle between capitalism and communism in order to pave the way for a new order as a compromise between the two parties.
- Evolution of control plans with scientific discoveries, especially the atomic bomb and communications revolution.
- The creation of financial markets and the formation of financial institutions in Europe and America aiming at acquiring the old major companies owned by the elite of former empires and then dismantling them and offering them up for sale in the major stock exchanges interconnected with the modern means of communications, and hiring professional managers as means of fragmentation and directed management of financial empires (likened to nationalization and public ownership) open to control by the brutal financial institutions through speculation that is similar to traditional piracy.
- The establishment of the United Nations as a protector of the nation-states resulting from the fragmentation of old empires and as an incubator to establish and develop the institutions of the global government.
- Targeting Islam and Muslims because of their ideology that resist modifications, demographic increase, revival movements and ideological radiation resulting from the communications revolution.
- The development of transnational state-of-the-art institutions, newly established or as a result of mergers, to control all human activities, especially media, culture, ethics, education and economy.

- Developing the idea of global governance, which is the application of transnational control systems under the pretense of better coordination, organization and higher efficiency.
- The use of functional groups for different functions of public control: politicians, academics, businessmen, clerics, organized religions, journalists, bankers, all facilitated through the power of fiat money issuance that is utilized to employ and enslave people.
- Developing and constraining the roles of national governments through imposed international agreements to become more like local administrations (privatization to impoverish governments - strengthening NGOs...).
- Implementation of dozens of military coups against the governments of Africa, Asia, South America and the former Soviet Union to overthrow national governments and replace them with armed governments obedient to global planning and unaware of its existence.
- Establishing institutions or organizations affiliated with the United Nations that carry out many tasks of national governments, especially the weak ones (the World Bank and its planned projects for geographical/demographic/economic changes - IMF, ICJ, INTERPOL ...) and writing their laws and bylaws in isolation from the vast majority of States (this is evidenced by a comparison between government ministries, United Nations organizations, sections and organs and their international affiliated or coordinated organizations).
- Controlling the economy of countries through financial markets, commodity markets, WTO, speculation, economic sanctions and wars.
- Attempts to control the culture and national memory of peoples and opposing religious beliefs and commandments through UNESCO, media, entertainment, satellite TV, education and social media.
- Engineering of international cooperation efforts to pave the way for the global government.
- The perpetration false flag terrorist acts (especially the events of September 2001) to keep the Moslems nearly at gun point and as justification for the declaration of martial law in developed West countries due to the imbalance in demography, and what amounts to abolishing democracy.
- Attempts to control food to control human population growth (seed control - genetic engineering ...).
- Persistent attempts to issue a global currency (implicating everybody even governments in debt and engineering financial crises ...) and attempts to impose a global tax (carbon tax ...).
- Attempts to abolish circulating money (even paper fiat currencies) to transform the human societies to societies without traditional currencies (Cashless societies) to achieve full control (smart cards - electronic money ...)

The most important evidence of the importance of this study is the Quranic warning (and that of the Prophet) of the existential conspiracy by the Satan and his jinn demon devils against mankind allied with the follower devils of mankind.

Another important evidence is its compatibility with the living reality which results from collecting the scattered parts of contemporary jigsaw puzzle published in the media and books.

The above universal plan is implemented by an alliance of the following Parties:

- An arrogant, rebellious, Satan against God, overtly the enemy of mankind, who seems to aim to prove that man is not worthy of divine honor and not faithful, and sets out to seduce him to give up the divine trust that God has entrusted him to carry, and that he is worse than Satan.

- Non believing atheist Jews who rebelled against God, their idea of God is almost pagan, who hate, misguide, allow killing, enslaving and confiscating non-Jews wealth.
- The descendants of the Roman elite (and others) who believe that they are in conflict with the gods of heaven and may win, and are concerned only with the stability of the rule of the emperor through redefining and controlling religion and the faithful (as they did with Christianity).
- The heads of the institutions of the definition of faith (the church which was founded by the Romans in cooperation with Jews who pretended to follow Christianity ...) who look after the faithful of the organized religions devised in order to preserve public order.
- Descendants of the North men or the Viking (or Normans) who are corrupt atheists who love domination.
- Wealth hoarder traders who attach no meaning to life without their wealth.
